

Why Water?

2016 Pacific Northwest Water Research Symposium

Hosted by the Oregon State University Hydrophiles

The Pacific Northwest Water Research Symposium is a two day student-centric conference highlighting outstanding student research in the fields of water resources science, engineering, and policy. The conference aims to connect individuals, build skills, and share knowledge between students, university faculty, staff, and professionals. Students, both graduate and undergraduate, travel from universities in Oregon, Washington, and Idaho to present their research.

The Oregon State University Hydrophiles student group invites you to become a sponsor to the sixth annual Water Research Symposium, being held this April 18th and 19th. We offer a diverse program to attendees, which is only possible through the generous sponsorship of organizations like yours.

Your support will foster the success of the following activities at this year's symposium:

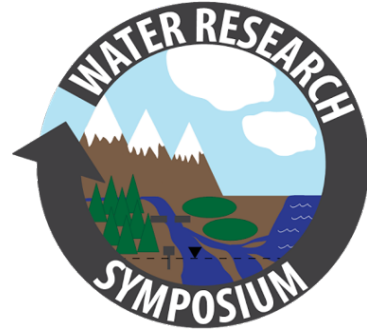

- Oral and poster presentation sessions on freshwater resources research conducted by students
- Facilitation of professional skill-building workshops
- Afternoon networking reception and keynote speaking event
- Mentorship meetings with private and nonprofit water resources professionals
- Event space and catering expenses

Best regards,

The 2016 Water Research Symposium Team
